

The Federationist Index for 1967

The year 1967 was a period of turmoil and confusion, a time of action and reaction. On the international scene, there was the continuing struggle in Viet Nam, the convulsions inside Communist China and the sudden Arab-Israeli war. At home, Americans found themselves grappling with a multiplicity of stubborn problems. If the 1966 elections strengthened the conservatives in Congress and slowed down domestic progress, the explosions in the ghettos served fresh warning that the nation had better give a higher priority to the needs of its citizens.

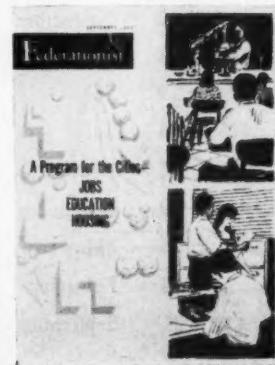

This was the drama reflected in the pages of The Federationist over the course of the year.

The poverty problem illustrated the many facets of labor's activity. Articles in The Federationist explained how economic growth was basic to building a more just society, how an improved wage-hour law lifted many out of poverty, how better education equipped people for more productive lives, how higher social security benefits and a modernized public assistance system were necessary and desirable to bring dignity to millions.

The fires in the ghettos illuminated an area where all the problems of poverty are concentrated and articles in this magazine repeated labor's appeals and programs.

So went 1967, a year in which the labor movement reached a new peak of over 14 million members. And yet few years have ended leaving greater challenges.

HOW TO USE INDEX

In master index, articles are listed alphabetically by title and numbered consecutively. The cross-indexes facilitate the finding of an article by subject or author.

Example: Organizing 10, 28, 32, 33, 41, 45, 52, 56

These numbers in the master index will yield the title, page and month for each article on the subject of organizing. Thus No. 10 produces the information: "The Changing Profile of the Labor Force," by Marvin Friedman, Page 7, July issue.
